

Crumbs for the Neighborhood Libraries

If Measure N, the $148 million bond measure passes, two-thirds of the proceeds would go to a new main library at Kaiser Center.

All the neighborhood libraries together would share just one-third of the money. For every $100 of bond money – and thus every $100 you pay in property taxes to repay these bonds – here's how much each library branch would get:

(Council's July 25, 2006 resolution)

Not one neighborhood library would get even close to 10 percent of the money. That's what happens when you propose to build a palace at Kaiser Center costing $733 per square foot.
